

Teaching Financial Literacy (TFL)

A free, online, interactive course good for 10 contact hours. Free resources included.

This 10-hour course is designed to get you started teaching your students personal finance. Teaching Financial Literacy (TFL) will put the material into a logical order that you can use as a starting point for great instruction on personal finance.

Furthermore, the course will introduce you to bundles of free, interactive, online resources and videos that you can bring to your students. You will also become familiar with several easy-to-use lesson plan websites and join in discussions with other teachers from around North Carolina. And the course will be moderated by a real, live human being whom you can use as a resource in the future!

You will also get a free copy of the new What Personal Finance Is About book that will act as a mini-textbook for this class.

The course is offered via the newly-updated Blackboard Coursesites, and is the result of a partnership between the North Carolina Council on Economic Education and the NC Department of Public Instruction.

How much is the registration fee? Free!

How do I register? Go to www.nccee.org/workshops.htm and follow the simple registration process.

When does it run? The first TFL session will begin on March 14 and run until May 30. TFL will also be offered in the fall semester 2011.

Who can I talk to for more information? E-mail Jennifer Ricks at jricks@dpi.state.nc.us or Stephen Day at sday@nccee.org. You can also call Stephen Day at the NC Council on Economic Education at 919-791-1995.
